Darca plans to nearly double its portfolio of 30 schools to 50 schools, expanding its student body from 16,000 to 25,000 – 30,000 over the next five years.

To achieve this goal, Darca conducted a strategic growth analysis to identify schools in the periphery with the greatest need where the Darca program can have the biggest impact.

The identified schools are in the most challenging, poverty-stricken towns and neighborhoods within the Jewish, Arab, Bedouin, Druze and Haredi (ultra-orthodox Jewish) sectors.

Strengthening education in these sectors is critical to Israel's future sustainability and the overall strength of the social fabric.

The proven Darca program is the benchmark in empowering Israeli populations at risk and the country as a whole to succeed and become more economically independent and secure.
